Nox Arcana: Winter's Knight

If you are one who finds Christmas music irritating by about the second weekend in December this might be the perfect antidote. It certainly works for me with its creepy symphonic ghostly tale set in the middle of winter. I have previously reviewed this band's material in the form of Necronomicon and I will be reviewing the rest of the back catalogue in the coming weeks.

Nox Arcana produce music that sounds like it should be off a soundtrack of some sort or other. This is not surprising as Joseph Vargo has done a whole myriad of soundtracks of both TV and movies. It is not all instrumental, as they toss in 'God Rest Ye Merry Gentlemen' for good measure. This is perfect soundtrack when you are all tired out by the Christmas hype and the annoyances of the season. Gothic symphonic goodness...what is there not to like?
